LETTERS TO LASELL

Editor's Note: "Letters to Lasell" is a section we've established to let alumnae be heard on any topic you care to write about. Do you like the idea of Lasell's offering four-year programs? What would you like to read about in the Bulletin? Write and tell us. We'll print pro and con letters, so don't hold back!

"No news — just hearty congratulations. I'm so delighted to read that you will be awarding baccalaureate degrees, I'm sending my first-time-ever pledge."

Beverly French Keigwin '62

"I finally feel at home at UMass...What a change from Lasell! I've realized just how spoiled I was at Lasell...Going there was the smartest decision I ever made. Those two years were the best!"

Wendy Gromko '88

"Returning to Lasell for Reunion always brings back warm and happy memories - time seems to melt away and it doesn't seem quite so long ago."

A Sisterhood of Different Cultures

One hour south of Tokyo lies the island of Shi Koku, one of the four major islands that make up Japan. The island is populated by small, bustling cities, one of which is Matsuyama. Matsuyama is bigger than Newton, more urban, in many ways, than Boston.

Last May, when five Lasell students and Assistant Professor Helen Alcala visited the city, they were welcomed on such a large scale that they were photographed and interviewed for the local newspaper.

Such a warm reception is traditional in Japan and was especially appropriate for the visiting Lasell students. They had traveled to see their "Sister College" — Matsuyama Shinonome Junior College. Lasell and Shinonome established a Sister College agreement in 1988. A similar agreement with Yamawaki Gakuen Junior College in Tokyo was established this year.

As sister cities do, the colleges decide to cooperate, "to work together in ways useful to the students and faculty of both schools, to share materials and ideas, and to establish an exchange program," explains Bob Kates, director of Marketing and External Relations.

"We wanted to offer our students exposure to the international dimensions of education and life experiences," says Cathy Livingston, dean of Academic Affairs. "Our agreements with Shinonome and Yamawaki enable us to host more international students on campus and provide travel opportunities to our students which could result in greater understanding and knowledge of other cultures."

Lasell hosted the first exchange last October when six Shinonome students and a faculty member visited the college. "No one had had any experience outside Japan," says faculty escort Chikako Tanaka, associate professor of Child Welfare at Shinonome Junior College. "Our students were so excited. Everyone was so welcoming and friendly. We enjoyed it very much."

Upon their arrival, the Shinonome students and Professor Tanaka attended a reception at the President's House. The students met their Lasell roommates and the four-week American experience began.

The Japanese students took classes at Lasell, learning "survival" English from Carol Knapton, Lasell's English As A Second Language instructor and coordinator of the Shinonome visit.

For a taste of American history and culture, they met several times a week in class to learn some basic history from Professor George Lane, but most of their time was spent on field trips.

"They took two to three field trips each week," Lane explains. "The trips were scheduled somewhat in historical order. We started at Plimoth Plantation and the Mayflower, and moved on to historical sites in Lexington, Concord, Salem, and Quincy, ending up at the JFK Library in Boston.

"Their favorite places were the Kennedy Library, the Museum of Fine Arts, and the Louisa May Alcott house in Concord," he continues. "Little Women is widely translated in Japan, and all the girls just loved seeing 'Jo's house.'"

In addition to the educational trips, the Shinonome students got a taste of regular student life in America. They sampled Lasell's cafeteria food, they shopped at Quincy Market, Filene's Basement, and L. L. Bean's, and they visited the homes of students and faculty.

"The girls especially enjoyed the weekend visits with faculty and Lasell students," says Professor Tanaka with a smile. "We went to Maine for three days and stayed in the summer house of one of the faculty and had Maine lobsters. What a treat!"

"I shared my room with Riko," remembers Christine Goodwin '90. "Although she didn't speak or understand much English, we did pretty well talking with each other. It took some creative body language on both our parts, but that made it even more fun. I really learned how to open my mind to what she was trying to tell me, and it was interesting to be on the other end when I went to Japan."

The Shinonome students left amid tears of friendship and a flurry of gift-giving. The first exchange was declared a success and plans were made for a reciprocal four-week visit.

By May, when the Lasell students headed off to Shinonome after Commencement, the college had established its agreement with Yamawaki Gakuen Junior College as well, and the trip was planned to include both schools.

Shinonome and Lasell students gather for a reception at the President's House last October.

Yamawaki students got an inside view of American student life when they visited Lasell in September.

Georgia Moran '89, Michelle Strathie '90, Assistant Professor Helen Alcalá, Jodi Humphrey '89, Kim Hope '89, and Ms. Sieki in Matsuyama, Japan.

“As we traveled to Tokyo, we noticed a gradual change around us. It seemed that as we got closer to Tokyo, the people became less traditional and more urban. It was interesting to see the different lifestyles.”

“It was a wonderful experience!” exclaims Kim Hope '89. “We couldn't believe the way they opened up their hearts and homes to us,” she says. Michelle Strathie '90, Jodi Humphrey '89, Christine Goodwin '90, Georgia Moran '89, and Kim were Lasell's “ambassadors.”

The students were accompanied by Helen Alcalá, assistant professor of foreign languages at Lasell. Alcalá serves as adviser to Japanese students already attending Lasell and had been intimately involved in planning the exchange program.

In Matsuyama, the students lived with the families of Shinonome students. They commuted to school on public transportation, taking buses, streetcars, and trains wherever they went. The Lasell students took a class in “survival” Japanese and Japanese history. They attended dinners and visited historical sites.

“It was so different,” explains Kim Hope. “Even the everyday things were different. Sleeping on futons; remembering to take our shoes off every time we entered a building; sitting on the floor for meals and eating with chopsticks; sharing bathwater; and, especially, the food!” After a week and a half, they left for Yamawaki.

The trip took another week and a half as the students stopped in Hiroshima, Kyoto, and other areas along the way.

They took a hydrofoil from Shi Koku to Hiroshima and went sightseeing with Professor Chikako Tanaka from Shinonome. Visiting the Hiroshima memorial was a particularly moving event.

“We were surrounded by Japanese schoolchildren,” says Helen Alcalá. “We were all very painfully aware of being American, but the Japanese were welcoming. I was very proud of our students; they understood the importance of this memorial and were respectful. It was an overwhelming experience, and the girls were silent for quite a while after leaving the memorial.”

In Kyoto, the students visited the incredible temples, shrines, and Buddhas of the region. Then, onward to Tokyo.

“As we traveled to Tokyo, we noticed a gradual change around us,” Kim says. “It seemed that as we got closer to Tokyo, the people became less traditional and more urban. It was interesting to see the different lifestyles.”

The students' arrival at Yamawaki was marked by a welcoming dinner at which they wore kimonos given them by the Shinonome students.

The Yamawaki community was surprised and flattered; it was a sign that Lasell held their culture and friendship in high esteem.

"The Yamawaki students were very friendly. We enjoyed spending time with them. They took us to boutiques in Tokyo, the Hard Rock Café, and Tokyo Disneyland. It was a great way to end our trip!" Kim says.

And a wonderful way to establish a relationship.

Yamawaki Gakuen Junior College sent five of its students to Lasell in September. Many were reunited with their Lasell friends. "I was so excited to be able to show them around my home and school," says Michelle Strathie '90.

Yamawaki and Lasell are planning to expand their relationship to encompass an articulation agreement that will allow Yamawaki students to transfer into Lasell's four-year programs and engage in other major collaborative efforts. This articulation agreement is thought to be the first in the country established between an American and Japanese school.

And that's not all. After the Yamawaki students' visit to Lasell, the college was preparing to welcome a new group of students from Shinonome.

"It's so exciting," says Christine Goodwin. "Meeting these students and getting to know them is something I'll remember and treasure for the rest of my life. They really are like sisters."

EXPANDING HORIZONS

Lasell is working on more ways to expose its students to international experiences. In addition to the Sister College agreement with Shinonome Junior College and the collaboration with Yamawaki Gakuen Junior College, Lasell is planning to participate in an exchange program with Richmond College, the American International College of London, this summer.

"We're already getting a response from students interested in attending the program," says Cathy Livingston, dean of Academic Affairs.

Administered through the American Institute of Foreign Study, the eight-week program enrolls students in courses that grant transferable credits, gives them places to live, and includes them in cultural and social events.

The college is also exploring the possibility of a summer session in painting at a college in southern Europe.

"We're also interested in extending an invitation to international schools to send their students here," says Bob Kates, director of Marketing and External Relations.

For example, the college has a close working relationship with the Kyoto School of Computer Science.

The Kyoto School, with an enrollment of 3,000 in Japan, held its first summer program at Lasell in 1989. The six-week program attracted 15 students, who lived in McClelland House. They used Lasell's computer lab, took English classes, and toured New York, New England, and Philadelphia during their visit.

As a result of the program's success, the school is considering holding two sessions of 30 students each next summer.

In addition, with true Japanese generosity, the school presented Lasell with the magnificent traditional ceremonial robe that graces the cover of this Bulletin.

Getting BUSINESS

Business is booming at Lasell, and it is the students who are reaping the benefits. Using an innovative approach to education, called “connected learning,” the college has developed opportunities for students to experience real working situations without ever leaving campus. The connected learning approach combines the best of both worlds: classroom theory and instruction with hands-on experience. And it is working at Lasell:

- ◆ The college’s business students have been given the responsibility of operating and managing the new retail management training center, the new bookstore. (See sidebar, page 10).
- ◆ Hotel, Travel/Tourism students are doing it all — reservations through housekeeping — at the Lasell Inn, the college’s own bed & breakfast.
- ◆ There are now special labs and rooms in Wolfe Hall that duplicate specific business environments in which students can study and work.

Down to BUSINESS

Todd Leach, business instructor, in the new bookstore. This semester the store design was conceived and implemented by Retail/Fashion Merchandising students in the buying class.

And more opportunities for real business experience are being developed on campus.

"There is a high demand in the business world for individuals with skills. Our goal is to provide the theoretical knowledge and the opportunity to use it. We want to help students develop flexible skills that they can adapt to many different business and learning situations," says Todd Leach, director of the Business Management, Accounting, Marketing and Office Systems programs.

After graduation, business majors at Lasell can graduate with an associate's degree and begin a career, transfer to a four-year college, or continue in one of Lasell's soon-to-be-established baccalaureate programs.

No matter what her choice, a Lasell student has the opportunity, through her regular program of study, to put into practice what she learns in class.

Take, for instance, students in the Business Management program. Most plan to continue their education to receive a baccalaureate degree, but some choose to enter the workforce upon graduation.

Business management students take a core curriculum required by all business students. In addition, they take courses in management, business law, accounting, and computers, as well as several electives.

During the second year, students planning to continue their education take additional liberal arts courses and advanced business courses; career students take more skills-oriented courses, such as word processing.

Now, in addition to their classroom instruction, business management students will get experience at the college's retail management training center (which has replaced the old bookstore).

Students will sit on the store's advisory board, have access to financial and inventory data, and will be responsible for helping to make decisions about the store.

As a part of their regular classes, business management students visit the center to observe the management role and see how and what types of decisions are made in managing a retail operation. They are expected to make presentations in Wolfe Hall's Adelaide Van Winkle Seminar Room — a room complete with an electronic chalkboard and a dark wood conference table that seats 10 in corporate style.

"One way or another, all business students will have the opportunity, through on-campus experience, to get a first-hand view of how the theory they learn in the classroom is put to use in the boardroom," Leach says.

Two new programs offered through the college's Division of Business — Office Systems and Marketing — are also based on the connected learning approach.

Office Systems teaches not only traditional office procedures but provides experience with the high-tech machinery usually found in today's offices.

"The new Office Systems program is focused on computer skills and even has a computer hardware course where students learn things like how to hook up a computer printer and change a disk drive," Leach explains. "Students take word processing and have to keep a certain word-per-minute speed, and they learn spreadsheets — both are basic in today's office."

The Marketing program was developed in response to a high level of interest in the subject among students. As in the other business programs, marketing students will be exposed to experience on campus and can do an internship in their senior year.

BUSINESS FUN

Business does not have to be all work and no play, according to Todd Leach, business instructor and adviser to Lasell's Women in Business Club. The two-year-old club was established to expose students to the less academic "fun" side of business.

Activities have included sitting in on a dynamic Harvard Business School class, joining the audience of WBZ-TV Channel 4's popular midday talk show, "People Are Talking," and taking the famous Christmas Stroll through Nantucket's retail area.

"We have a lot of fun and also get a chance to see how vibrant the business of business really is," Leach explains. "For instance, we took the Christmas Stroll, keeping in mind that this popular New England event was originally created to increase tourism to the island during a traditionally slow season. Sitting in on a Harvard Business class was a great way to let students see that the theories they are learning are also taught at the best business schools in the country."

The club's membership has been increasing steadily over the past two years, and students are beginning to plan their own activities. "Participation in the club has helped students see how creative business people really are and gets them excited about their chosen career," Leach says.

This internship time is available to all business students. "Transfer students can do an internship, but we encourage them to first make sure they've taken all the courses they need to achieve acceptance at the school of their choice," Leach explains. "For career students, completing an internship is a requirement."

Every year, an average of 15 Lasell business students are involved in internships. All interns are paid by their employers. "I personally approve each opportunity and make sure there is a clear understanding that the intern is expected to gain significant experience, rather than be just another paid employee," Leach says.

Internships offer a student experience in her area of interest. Last year, a student who wanted to see what an accounting job would be like worked as an accounting clerk at the Stride Rite Corporation. Another student, interested in art, worked for Signatures, an art retail shop in the Chestnut Hill Mall. She was taken on buying trips and was even given a $500 budget to do her own buying for the store.

"We've never had trouble placing our students in internships," Leach says.

"Our transfer students are accepted by schools like Bentley, Babson, Boston University, University of New Hampshire, Simmons, and Boston College. I think Lasell does a good job preparing them for the next step."

Assistant Professor Barbara Beltrand is a woman with an open, friendly personality. With her youthful face, she could almost be mistaken for a student.

But looks can be deceiving, and that's one of the first lessons students learn in her accounting classes. "You're going to have to learn to manage your time and plan to spend eight to ten hours a week on my class alone. If you think you're going to study the night before a test and get it — forget it."

The warning comes from someone who really knows, and is tempered with understanding of the "math fear" many women students bring to math-related subjects.

"I'm emotionally in tune with my students," Beltrand says. "I avoided math for years. I had no intention of taking math in college; I majored in English and anthropology." But she found, like many other women in the workforce, that math is important. She went back to school for an advanced degree in Professional Accounting.

"I tell my students, 'You may not work in accounting but if you want to advance in any area of business — retail, travel, tourism, sales, even if you want to open your own day care center — you've got to be able to read, interpret, analyze, plan, and forecast using financial statements. Even if you don't do your own financial statements, you've got to be able to talk to your accountant.'"

Accounting classes are small and meet several times a week. In addition, students attend a weekly lab. Beltrand says she does everything she can to make the math part of accounting "very approachable" and gives students as much individual attention as possible.

"We've made changes in the accounting curriculum to increase the one-on-one teaching opportunities; to encourage students to team up and study together, and to fully integrate computers into the curriculum," she says. "It's been very successful — last year we cut the failure rate in half for beginning accounting students.

"I find that if I can get the students to hang in there long enough to feel good about themselves and the discipline of the subject, then we've cleared the major hurdle, and suddenly everything clicks," she says. "Our new approach of using labs and computers has made that possible. It's great to see students get a grasp on the subject and realize that they can control the numbers, not be controlled by them."

Barbara Beltrand and students in the Gordon Seminar Room.

A little experience can go a long way in helping students see how the theory they learn in the classroom is used in real work situations. Lasell is using the connected learning approach through a variety of business opportunities on campus.

Retail Management Training Center Wait 'til you see the old bookstore!

New this year, Lasell's retail management training center (the bookstore), is a for-profit retail operation. Located in the Edwards Student Center, the new store is more than twice the size of the old bookstore. Best described as a mini Harvard Coop, it offers clothing, cosmetics, gifts, food, lingerie — and, of course, textbooks and school supplies. Most important, the center is a training facility for many students.

"We'll be working with faculty and students from all the business programs to develop opportunities for solid retail experience," says Cathy Livingston, dean of Academic Affairs. "The students will be very involved in the day-to-day operations of the store."

Students will handle accounts payable, inventory, purchasing, visual merchandising, sales, banking services, and a variety of other retail responsibilities.

In addition, each semester two student interns and several business classes will be given a portion of the store in which to design and run their own retail specialty shop. "They'll be able to create a project from the ground up," says Todd Leach, business instructor. "The students will do the research and test the theories behind what they've learned in class. It will be a tremendous confidence-building opportunity and will start them on their way to developing a strong professional identity based on experience."

The bookstore will also be student-named. A contest to name the new facility will be held on campus late fall; name entries will be judged by the student advisory board.

Heath Family Management Center

The entire main floor of Wolfe Hall is now called the Heath Family Management Center. Included are the Campbell Travel and Tourism Classroom, the Gordon Seminar Room, the Van Winkle Seminar Room, and the Fashion Merchandising Lab all areas that in some way duplicate a specific business environment for students.

Business program instructor Janet Daubenspeck in the Travel and Tourism Classroom

The Elizabeth Campbell Travel and Tourism Classroom houses an extensive collection of finely detailed maps that pull down from the ceiling to full chalkboard size. Special racks display tour and trip brochures and the walls are decorated with travel posters. Clocks which display the actual time in countries around the world are spaced around the room.

The classroom complements the Travel and Tourism Lab in the college library, which effectively simulates the environment of a travel agency. The lab has 16 computers that allow students to learn the airline reservation systems used by most major airlines and travel agencies.

The Sarah Gordon Seminar Room encourages student discussion and participation, the basis of the case study method of learning. Students sit in rows that curve in a half circle and are built on graduating levels, as in an amphitheatre. "It really encourages the give and take of different ideas and opinions and creates a forum very similar to that in which business decisions are made," says Todd Leach.

The Adelaide Van Winkle Seminar Room is a replica of a real boardroom. Complete with oriental rug, an electronic chalkboard, and a conference table, the room will be used for student presentations and for meetings of the advisory boards of many of the business programs.

The Adelaide Van Winkle Seminar Room

The Peter T. Mitchell Fashion Merchandising Lab is a replica of a specialty store, complete with mannequins, every type of clothing display fixture, and a full-size bay window that looks onto the walkway in front of Wolfe Hall. Students can learn how to merchandise an entire retail floor using the fixtures in the lab.

The Lasell Inn

The Lasell Inn

The renovated and redecorated Plummer House is now the Lasell Inn, the college's own bed & breakfast. The three-bedroom inn is entirely run and managed by Lasell students. From housekeeping and reservations to marketing and budgets, students can learn first hand about the hotel business. The bed & breakfast is open to alumnae, parents, and other friends of the Lasell community (see our ad on the inside back cover of the Bulletin).

The Child Study Centers at Rockwell and the Barn

Lasell's Rockwell Child Study Center has offered Early Childhood Education (ECE) students practical training with preschoolers since 1956. Building on that success, the college invested more than $500,000 to renovate the old student lounge, affectionately known as the Barn, and open a day care center this fall.

The college is particularly grateful to the Amelia Peabody Foundation for its gift of $20,000 toward the renovation. Already filled to its capacity with 55 children, this state-of-the-art facility, complete with special observation booths, gives ECE students a further opportunity to work directly with infants and toddlers.

Elizabeth New Weld, Boston Globe editor

Presidents Mitterrand of France and Bush of the United States are speaking right now just down the turnpike.

I came past the flashing lights of the state troopers lining the turnpike and saw helicopters landing on the other side of the Charles River, and I wanted you to know that what's happening here at Lasell this morning is just as important as all that fuss down the road.

So while presidents speak about defense and foreign policies, I want to tell you another kind of story.

Once upon a time, on a hot Florida evening, a little girl stood among palmettos and scratchy grass in a pasture, playing outfield for her brother's baseball team. Supper was finished, and the grown-ups were rocking on the screened porch while the cousins played.

The little girl was allowed to play outfield for both teams when they went up to bat. She was too little to catch anything, but she could chase the balls into the brush and bring them up to the second baseman, feeling important and excited.

No one hit anything to the outfield for a long time because they weren't very old, either. She stood on one foot to keep the sharp grass out of the edge of her sandal and slapped at the mosquitoes beginning to come.

"I want to bat," she called out. No one answered. She called again, and finally started walking up to home plate, interrupting the game. "You're too little," her brother said angrily. "We need you in the outfield."

The following address was given by Elizabeth New Weld, learning editor of

The Boston Globe, at Commencement, May 1989.

Earlier this spring, I was asked to give the commencement speech at Boston University. But I told them I was already committed to Lasell, so they rushed back to their list and settled for numbers two and three. And that's why

TURN DOWN LEARNING

“What you’ve been given here, no one can ever take away from you.”

“No,” she said. “I want to bat. It’s my turn.” And she felt tears coming, meaning she was about to lose the argument. Finally, her grandfather stood up from his great green rocking chair, opened the porch door, and came down the steps. “We’ll be a team,” he said. “I’ll bat, and Sissy will run.”

Her heart swelled. Papa was coming down. Now the boys would listen. He had swooping black eyebrows, thick white hair, and sharp blue eyes.

He picked up the bat, winked at her, and hitched his pants up over his belly. “Let me have it,” he said. He leaned over to Sissy and whispered loud, “Run now!” The pitcher wound up; she started running with her short sturdy legs. Papa hit the ball with a crack, and she jumped joyfully onto the palm frond that marked first base.

“That’s not fair!” the boys cried. “’Tis, too! ’Tis too!!” she called, dancing around the base.

When Papa said it was fair, it was.

You never know when you are learning something useful.

I was that little girl. Out at the end of the pasture, I learned to endure heat, insects, and discomfort just to be part of the team. I used it later: on the high school lacrosse field when I thought I had no more breath left, I found it somewhere and sprinted after my opponents. And years later, during long nights, walking my two baby daughters with earaches or croup. I use it now on Thursday nights, when my section of the newspaper is getting ready to go to press, and I trudge up and down the two steep flights between my desk and the composing room,

“Never turn down
learning anything.
You don’t know
when you’ll need it.
And never think

wondering if I can face the next two or three hours it will take to get my section just right. But I can do it. I had good training.

The four-year-old slapping mosquitoes in the pasture learned that sometimes if you do a job too well, no one will notice that you want to do something else. Unless you say so. I had to let them know I wanted to bat.

Then, I had to get them to listen.

That’s the key to playing with the boys: You have to get them to listen.

I heard an observation the other day that says it just right: There’s nothing like being the younger sister of an older brother to create a feminist.

My grandfather, who championed me and made the boys listen, was a partial feminist: He took me seriously that evening, and he took my mother seriously and sent her to college and library school when it wasn’t a popular thing to do. But he was only partial because, as a man of his generation and culture, he really didn’t enjoy the company of women.

That was my first male champion. I had others, and so have you. Not only the men in your lives now - and I hope they’re on your side - but Williams College Professor Edward Lasell, who started this college 137 years ago, was a champion, taking women seriously.

His vision reached across 63 years to an 11-year-old sending for catalogues to women’s colleges and boarding schools in about 1924. That was my mother, who had three older brothers - I think that makes her a triple feminist. Because she lost her own mother at the age of four, she says she always longed for female company. Scanning the ads in magazines looking for her ideal school, she saw the Lasell ad, which always showed a handsomely dressed young woman on a beautiful horse. That did it. She was coming here. But she ended up at another women’s college in Georgia.

So I am part of a tradition, just as you are, seeking the company of like-minded women for certain parts of my life. When I was in my women’s college, in the midst of all-night conversations and papers, laughing and eating, I pined for the company of men and spent energy planning how to obtain it. Now that I have it - and wonderful company it is - I spend energy planning how to spend time with women, listening to their voices and being able to hear my own.

I began listening to women’s voices in my kitchen and living room, to my mother and grandmother. I learned the language of women, which writer Ursula LeGuin calls the mother tongue, the talking that connects us to each other, helps us understand other people and that gave me a love of stories.

Author Kurt Vonnegut has said that he learned to be a writer because, as a boy, he sat in the kitchen listening to women talk and not running up and down a football field with a helmet covering up his ears.

What could I do with this love of stories and other vague skills? Lily Tomlin considers the question in her hit show, "The Search for Signs of Intelligent Life in the Universe." The main character, Trudy, is a bag lady with an unusual wisdom. As she wheels her shopping cart with the squeaky wheels across the stage, she looks at the audience and says, "I always wanted to be somebody, but I guess I should have been more specific."

I wasn't that specific either.

When I was 22, looking for work in New York City, I took a job training to copy edit manuscripts at a publishing company. I learned to go through the typewritten pages looking for errors of spelling, grammar and style. We marked each change with a little green tag that stuck out from the side of the page in a fringe.

My first book was about concrete grouting. No stories there.

I took to straying across the hall to hear the head proof-reader, a small, elegant woman, tell about being a Russian ballerina. I should have noticed then that I needed to do work that had stories in it. When I went in to quit after eight months, my boss said pleasantly, "Why, Elizabeth, I'm so glad you've come to tell us this, because we were going to suggest the same thing. I hope you find some work where you can use your personality more."

She meant that I talked too much and didn't put enough little green tags on the pages. She was right. I moved on to teaching and community work. Seventeen years later, through a twist of fortune, I needed to support myself and my family.

I reached deep in my bag of tricks, and out came that copy editing. The little green tags stood up and got me a part-time job at The Boston Globe editing the children's section in the Sunday paper known as the Fun Pages.

So never turn down learning anything. You don't know when you'll need it. And never think you are too old.

I was 40 when I started at the Globe, and I learned as I went along how to use the computer, how to do layout and set type. Then I got on the staff full time, and I began to write again, after I thought my chances to do that were over. Now I'm finally working with stories full time, putting them together by reporting, listening to them, reading them, and telling them by writing.

It is my third career. It may not be my last. I can still learn something new.

Learning has always been my friend - my Seminar for Success. I don't mean grades - I didn't figure out how to study well until graduate school. So if you didn't get very good grades, it's OK. I mean learning. For work, for fun, and for comfort. I love the words of the wizard Merlin, who tutors the young King Arthur in T. H. White's book The Sword in the Stone. "Remember," he tells the boy, "whenever you're sad, learn something."

Or, I'd like to add, teach someone else something.

That was one of the wonderful parts about raising children: I had to learn a lot and teach a lot. There's nothing like having to teach someone something to sharpen your wits.

In an ambitious age, when women are deep in the world of work, I want to say that if you want to have children, I hope that you have them. If you don't have your own, I hope you enjoy, help with - and read to - other people's children. After all, as Toni Morrison, author of Beloved, said in an interview in Time magazine, it takes a whole community to raise them - aunts, uncles, teachers, grandparents, neighbors, friends, as well as parents.

Your college is smart enough to know that and to offer you the knowledge and the awareness that children are the central issue of our survival and our glory.

And we need women with a vision of what's possible.

Alex Haley, who wrote the novel Roots, which was the basis of the television series, tells about the egg of an eagle that fell out of its eyrie on a cliff into a chicken yard, where it rolled up next to a nest. It stayed there until it hatched, and the baby eagle struggled out into the yard.

She looked around and watched the others to see what to do. She saw them pecking and striding and pecking and striding, and she did the same. Every once in a while, she'd open her wings and give them a shake, but no one else did that, so she gave it up.

One day, a great bird flew over the chicken yard, and its shadow fell across the baby eagle. She gave a shiver and looked up to watch the vanishing speck in the sky.

"What was that?" she asked the rooster. "That was an eagle," the rooster said, "but don't get any ideas. You're just a chicken, and that's all you'll ever be."

So the little eagle turned her head back down to the dirt in the chicken yard and went back to pecking. She never found out that she was anything other than a chicken.

But this story has other endings. Today, as I look out at your beautiful young faces - and how wonderful you look in those handsome blue robes - I see a flock, a cloud of eagles, poised for flight. I see your wings spreading, and I wish you a long journey, full of adventure and full of instruction.

As we celebrate your studious achievements, your life of the mind, your right to learn what you wish and to keep on learning, let us give a salute together to your counterparts across the world, the students in China who, as we speak, are under martial law, confronting soldiers, for wanting freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom to study whatever they want - for wanting what you have.

What you've been given here, no one can ever take away from you.

Godspeed.

Elizabeth New Weld, learning editor of The Boston Globe, is a graduate of Wellesley College and Columbia Teachers College of Columbia University. She has been a teacher, worked for the North Shore Council on Alcoholism, is a mother, writer, and a self-proclaimed lifelong student.

LASELLIA

Visions for Lasell

A laudatory initial report from a national accreditation team may mean that Lasell will receive approval to offer baccalaureate degrees earlier than originally expected.

President Thomas E. J. de Witt reports that official approval from the Massachusetts Board of Regents of Higher Education for Lasell to offer baccalaureate degrees in three of its programs is now expected by late 1989 instead of next summer.

A team of leading national academicians, appointed by the Board of Regents, visited Lasell for two days in June. The group interviewed administrators, faculty, and staff, and evaluated the college's strengths and weaknesses.

Subsequently, the team submitted an initial report to the Board of Regents that praised the college's proposal to offer baccalaureate degrees in Early Childhood Education; Hotel, Travel/ Tourism Administration; and Retail/Fashion Merchandising. Further, the report recommended to the Commonwealth that Lasell be granted four-year status.

"The team was very laudatory of our connected learning approach — combining classroom instruction with practical experience," says President de Witt.

"We feel this is an important and valuable part of the educational process and we are working to develop more on-campus work experiences."

Already, students can take advantage of opportunities to work in the student-run bookstore, fashion laboratory, bed & breakfast, the college's preschool, and the new day care center (see "Getting Down to Business," on page 6).

"Exposure to real working situations enhances what students learn in the classroom and provides valuable skills and experience which will give them a head start in the working world," de Witt says.

Other good news from Lasell

- ◆ Freshmen admissions were up 22 percent this year, prompting the opening of two additional dorms, Cushing Hall and Nason House.
- ◆ There is already a long list of parents waiting for openings for their children at the college's new day care center in the Barn.
- ◆ Alumnae giving is up 70 percent this year, helping to fund some of the most important services and programs the college must offer to achieve its vision for the future.

College Has Full House During Summer

June, July, and August were busy months at Lasell this year, even though all the students were on vacation.

The college welcomed more than 12 different groups that used classrooms, dorms, labs, the cafeteria, and support services for a variety of purposes.

These visitors included participants in a program that helps immigrant teenagers from the Boston area adjust to life in the U.S.; two summer camps of young people who came from western Massachusetts to tour the Boston area; a computer education camp for 7 to 16-year-olds; an adult computer workshop; an arts program for preschoolers; a teacher retraining center; and the Marriott Food Service Corporation.

"Hosting these groups generates revenue for the college and puts the college in front of audiences who may have never heard of it before," says Betsey Winter '70, Lasell vice president for Business and Finance. "The visitors discover our beautiful campus and how close it is to downtown Boston. They meet and interact with faculty and staff, and come away with a good feeling about Lasell."

Crewing the Charles Again

With a little help from their friends, Lasell students once again are crewing on the Charles River.

In a cooperative effort with Beaver Country Day School, Lasell's Lifestyles program (athletics and much more) is offering crew as one of its many activities this fall.

"The Beaver Country Day School is providing our students with coaching and equipment, and we're sharing our boathouse with them," explains Kerri Heffernan, Lifestyles program director. "We'll have two shells with teams of four each."

The boathouse was cleaned and spiffed up for the season, and the college's shells are expected once again to become a familiar sight along the river.

In addition to crewing, students in the Lifestyles program have a choice of tennis, soccer, volleyball, basketball, or karate this fall.

Lasell will be represented in competitive soccer and tennis matches for the first time, playing against Suffolk University, Endicott College, Becker Junior College, Wentworth Institute of Technology, Lesley College, and Simmons College.

Lifestyles is also offering karate classes for the first time. Instructor George Mattson is a well-known expert in the U.S. and Asia and has written several books on the art of karate.

His classes are open to the entire Lasell community. He is also offering classes to neighborhood children as well as a special class for handicapped children.

Drama Instructor Enters, Stage Lasell

Edward Cornely has joined Lasell as the college's first drama coach and instructor.

The instructor/writer/actor has broad experience in community theater and is the director of a highly acclaimed local improvisational theater group called Creative Theatre Ink.

Cornely will teach an introductory course about theater arts. Students will learn how to analyze a dramatic script, write for the stage, design sets, create lighting, and other aspects of theater. The course will culminate in the production of a play for the entire campus community.

"The experience we create together is intended to improve self-esteem and build teamwork as well as develop acting and presentational skills," Cornely says. "And of course, be fun."

Cornely's goal is to expand this class into additional theater courses next year and establish a drama club on campus.

Cornely has worked with students and adults, directing high school and community theater groups for more than 10 years. He holds a B.A. from Adelphi University, an M.A. from Stony Brook University, and a certificate of advanced graduate study from the University of Vermont.

New Faculty Join Lasell for Expansion

As Lasell prepares for its four-year programs, the scope and number of college faculty will be increased. Several new members of the faculty are:

- ◆ Barbara Ann Fitzsimmons, formerly the training program coordinator for the Child Caregiver Program at the U.S. Naval Facility in Argentia, Newfoundland. Fitzsimmons brings a wide range of curriculum development and teaching experience to her new position as an assistant professor in Lasell's Early Childhood Education program. Fitzsimmons holds an Ed.D. and M.S. from the University of Southern California; B.A., Old Dominion University.
- ◆ Stephen Sarikas, previously an assistant professor of science at Boston University. He has taught college-level courses at Boston University School of Medicine and at Southern Illinois University. Sarikas will teach biology, chemistry, anatomy, and physiology at Lasell. He holds a Ph.D. from Boston University School of Medicine; M.A., Southern Illinois University; B.S., University of Massachusetts-Amherst.
- ◆ Richard Gilman, formerly a part-time instructor in Hotel and Restaurant Management at Lasell and Essex Agricultural & Technical Institute. Gilman is the new director of Lasell's Hotel, Travel/Tourism program. He brings experience in the hotel and restaurant industry and has taught at the Restaurant School in Philadelphia and at Johnson & Wales College. Gilman holds an M.S.M. from Lesley College; B.A., Bentley College; B.A., Johnson & Wales College.
- ◆ David Murphy, assistant director of field education, Boston University School of Theology, joins Lasell on a part-time basis this fall and will become a full-time instructor second semester. Murphy is director of Lasell's new Communications program. He holds a Ph.D. from Ottawa University; S.T.D., St. Paul University; M.S., Boston University; M.A., Cornell University.

Continuing Education Courses Expanded, Credits Now Awarded

The Division of Continuing Education (formerly the Women's Center) is changing and diversifying to keep up with the college's planned four-year status.

Beginning this fall, alumnae and other adult women students will be able to enroll on a part-time basis in any course offered at the college and earn credits toward an associate's degree. In addition, Continuing Education will offer 11 certificate programs this year (up from last year's six) that will also award credits toward a degree.

"This will give women students the options of studying to receive a certificate in a special field, attending the college on a part-time basis to build toward an associate's degree, or just taking certain classes for personal interest or enhancement," says Pamela Armstrong, director of Continuing Education.

In addition, adult students now will be able to pursue federal Pell Scholarship funds and grant money through the Commonwealth. "These financial assistance programs were not available to most students through the Women's Center," Armstrong explains.

The Division of Continuing Education is exploring a number of additional ways to streamline the education process to offer more options to adults. One of the possibilities includes becoming a test site for CLEP exams, which allow adult students to receive credit for life and work experience and "test out" of certain classes required for a degree.

"For instance, a woman who has worked for a number of years as a secretary might be able to 'test out' of the English requirement for her associate's degree," Armstrong explains.

"We're also investigating providing corporate training programs as well as a weekend college program that would offer adult learners the opportunity to receive an associate's degree through an accelerated program."

Certificate programs offered through Continuing Education this year include accounting, day care, entrepreneurship, fashion merchandising and retail management, hotel management, insurance, office systems, office systems administration, sales and marketing, travel and tourism, and women's studies. For more information about Lasell's Division of Continuing Education, call 243-2145.

Boston Globe Looks to Lasell for Preschool Advice

A recent story in The Boston Globe about finding the right preschool highlighted Lasell's Rockwell Child Study Center, calling it a "benchmark" for a parent to use when evaluating preschools.

Shirley Gallerani '53, director of the Child Study Centers, was interviewed extensively for the story. "Parents should look for schools that will send their child off with a positive attitude and some sense of independence," she told the Globe.

According to the Globe, "The Lasell Child Study Center at Rockwell in Newton... is worth visiting to use as a benchmark [when looking at preschools for your child]."

Trustee News

Two longtime members of Lasell's Board of Trustees, Donald Winslow and Arthur Gregorian, have been named Trustee Emeriti. Laurie McCormick McKeever '72 has been elected to the board.

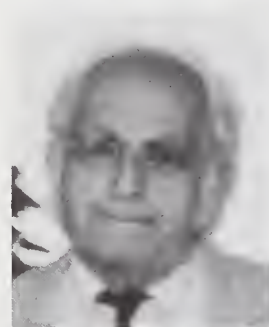

Donald Winslow has been closely associated with Lasell all his life. The son of Guy Winslow, former president of the college, he was born in Karandon House and has two sisters who are Lasell graduates.

Dr. Winslow taught at Boston University for 41 years and served as the chairman of its English Department. After retiring in 1977, he wrote a history of Lasell, Lasell: A History of the First Junior College for Women, which was published in 1987.

The 1981 Lasell Medallion recipient, Dr. Winslow lives in Auburndale with his wife, Charlotte.

Arthur Gregorian is perhaps the best known merchant of priceless oriental rugs in New England. Through his generous donations, the college established the Gregorian Room in the Brennan Library, and many Lasell buildings are graced by his beautiful floor coverings.

Mr. Gregorian has served on Lasell's Board of Trustees for more than 20 years and was chairman of the board's development committee.

He has been active with the Florida alumnae clubs and was instrumental in bringing international students to the college.

Mr. Gregorian received the Lasell Medallion in 1986. He is a noted linguist and author and has traveled extensively.

Laurie McCormick McKeever '72, a Lasell corporator and past co-chairman of the Campaign for Lasell, was recently elected to the Board of Trustees. Ms. McKeever was the first female certified financial planner in New England and the first and only woman regional vice president for the largest oil and gas securities firm in the U.S. She started her own financial planning firm, McCormick Associates, in 1984.

Ms. McKeever is also a graduate of Boston College. She lives in Northridge, Calif.

The PACT Program

Through an innovative new program, Parent and Child Together (PACT), Lasell is putting into action its commitment to provide educational opportunities for women from all walks of life.

Up to five academically qualified and motivated single women, each with a young child, will participate in this pilot program, which has potential for nationwide implementation.

"Instead of dead-end jobs and prospects of welfare dependency, these young women will receive a firm educational foundation for living personally and professionally satisfying lives," says President de Witt.

Seed money for the program was provided by Ruth Rawlings Mott '21 ($25,000), by the Davis Educational Foundation ($76,575), and by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development ($250,000 over five years).

The women and children of PACT will live in Pickard House, which has been renovated to accommodate the families as well as a resident social worker.

While their mothers are attending classes in one of the college's associate degree programs, the children will be cared for in Lasell's new day care center in the Barn.

Comprehensive support services, ranging from seminars on parenting skills to assistance in finding permanent housing and career-track jobs, are part of PACT.

"PACT is a contemporary reaffirmation of Lasell's historic mission to educate women," President de Witt says.

Lasell Medallions Presented to Faculty Members

Norma MacLeod

Sylvia Goodman

Two faculty members are the latest to receive Lasell Medallions, the Alumnae Association's highest award.

Norma MacLeod, an instructor in Nursing for 27 years, and Sylvia Goodman, a 24-year instructor in the Science Department, were awarded Medallions at Commencement.

Although the Medallions are usually awarded at Reunion, a special, surprise presentation was made this year at Commencement so that MacLeod's and Goodman's colleagues could be part of the ceremony.

A second presentation was made at Reunion so that the Alumnae Association could recognize the achievements of these two dedicated teachers.

"The Lasell Medallion is awarded each year to a member of the Lasell family who, by virtue of distinguished service to the college or to society at large, has brought added honor to the name of Lasell," says Marsha Keyes Tucker '64, chair of the 1988-1989 Medallion Committee. "Norma and Sylvia are clearly deserving of this honor. They have given much to the college, and society, by continually providing an excellent education to the young women who have come to them over the years."

Nominations for next year's Medallion recipient will be taken until March 1, 1990. Please send your nomination to Mrs. Alan Chesebro, 110 Carver Road, Newton Highlands, MA 02161.

Family Foundation of America: An Alumna Reaches Out

The Family Foundation of America is a volunteer relief group based in Florida founded by Ruth Van Allen Wells '29 and her husband, Ken.

For almost five years, Ruth has dedicated herself to the foundation, which provides humanitarian assistance to Central America, particularly El Salvador; to the economically depressed Appalachian region of the United States; and to areas of Miami where many refugees from Nicaragua have sought shelter.

Through the Welles' efforts, the Family Foundation of America has sent hundreds of tons of donated goods: garden seeds, clothes, food, toys, health supplies, beds, detergents, soap, and other necessities to the families in these areas.

In addition, the foundation has established the Leg Bank, which rebuilds artificial limbs and gives them to victims of war.

More than 3,200 families belong to the foundation and donate clothes, food, and medical supplies. The foundation coordinates the distribution of the goods and has financed the trips of several children to the U.S. for medical care.

"Dr. Wells and I are continuing our compassionate service for orphanages, hospitals, and schools in Central American war zones. We've shipped 105 tractor-trailor loads to the desperately needy," writes Ruth in a recent note to Lasell.

Katherine Braithwaite Leutwyler, Brewster, MA, enjoys social life, church activities, and travel. She went on a Caribbean cruise last winter.

Emily Crump Ramstetter, Richmond, VA, is enjoying living in a retirement community and stays busy with the senior group at church.

Ellen Zacharias Cullen, Harwich, MA, enjoys her volunteer work, her six grandchildren and six great-grandchildren. "Never a dull minute."

CAPs Off to Alumnae's Companion Animal Program

Jean Dewar Warren '43, of Orleans, wanted to bring a little happiness and company into the lives of the elderly and handicapped on the Cape.

A lifelong animal lover, Jean is the founder of CAP, the Companion Animal Program.

CAP volunteers make regular visits to local nursing homes with dogs and cats. The residents have the opportunity to watch the animals perform obedience and trick behaviors and visit with them.

"Pets are good for people," says Jean. "Research shows that a companion animal can enhance the physical and mental well-being of an elderly person by providing security and company that alleviates feelings of depression or loneliness."

In addition to the nursing home visits, CAP will help select, train, and maintain a companion animal for a senior or disabled individual. Volunteers will also provide training sessions for companion animals in their masters' homes.

CAP is funded entirely through membership dues and donations. Many members of CAP volunteer their own pets as "therapy animals," animals that are obedience trained, friendly, and are brought to nursing homes or individuals' homes for visits.

"These animals do not have to be pure-bred," Jean says. "All they need to do is offer residents something to touch and snuggle with."

The Beauty of Britain Inspires Business

Patricia Perry Polidor '64 has done the almost impossible — combined business and pleasure.

A travel agent for many years, Pat struck out on her own in 1982 and founded her own travel company, Strictly Britain, Ltd.

Although she will plan individual itineraries, her specialty is designing and promoting private and small group tours of Great Britain. In fact, Pat limits her tours to only 16 participants so that she can truly personalize the British experience.

"We dwell with equal care on both the small pleasures of British life and the popular attractions," said Pat in a recent newspaper interview. "Because we limit our group size, we can slow the pace in order to travel along narrow country lanes and explore those areas that typical tourists never see."

Pat plans her tours to appeal to different interests — castles, the seaside, stately homes, history, even literature. With one tour, she took a spontaneous side trip to the home of a visitor's favorite author.

The tourists stay in first-class accommodations — "establishments with Old World charm" — such as stone manor houses with rambling gardens, haunted castles, and grand seafront hotels.

"Great Britain is my favorite place to visit," the Rochester, N.Y., resident says, "and it continues to grow on me."

Annual Fund Report

July 1, 1988—June 30, 1989

Dear Alumnae and Friends:

As Chairman of the Annual Fund and, more importantly, as an alumna of Lasell, I am pleased to report to you that $219,951 was contributed to the 1988-89 Annual Fund. This amount represents a dramatic increase over the previous year's figure of $128,193 — and you're the reason!

Your gifts to Lasell's Annual Fund last year made a significant difference in helping to meet the financial needs of a number of students. In addition, your contribution helped to fund such projects as the expansion of the now student-run bookstore and the refurbishment of Plummer House to create the Lasell Inn. Come see for yourself!

The following report lists all donors to the 1988-89 Lasell Annual Fund. We are sincerely grateful to all of the alumnae and friends who thoughtfully supported Lasell. Thanks!

Sincerely,

Lynn Blodgett Williamson

The Lasell Inn

Now alumnae have a real home away from home when they visit the Boston area. Lasell's own bed and breakfast — The Lasell Inn.

Visiting friends in the area? Attending a late-night engagement downtown? Thinking about Christmas shopping in Boston?

After spending a busy day, spend a quiet evening in a beautiful, traditional Victorian home, Plummer House, on the Lasell campus.

The fully renovated and newly decorated bed and breakfast boasts three guest rooms and is entirely run and managed by Lasell students. Guests are treated to a continental breakfast each morning.

Close to public transportation and the major expressways that lead in and out of Boston, The Lasell Inn offers easy access to all the excitement of the city, while also providing a private, quiet get-away.

The Lasell Inn is open to alumnae, parents, and other friends of the Lasell community.
